

TOPOLOGY KEY:

- Path to a new window (A window might have multiple of these as different controls can lead to different windows)
- Loopback arrow to one of the three main food options from the "SelectionMenu" (Only available from the "PrintOutWindow")
- Path to Receipt (opens up a "MessageBox" window after hitting the "Complete and Print Order Button" image)
- Path to StartingWindow (achieved by hitting the "Cancel Button" image and clicking "OK" in the pop-up window)

Side note: It is possible to move back to a previous window by using the "Previous button" image. This process uses a stack-like process that records each actions done by a user on a window and adds the details to a session list. When pressing this back, it removes the session object from the list that may even change the details of the running list. This is the image that you want to look for when trying to do this:

Since the image itself is clickable, clicking anywhere on it will take you to the "SelectionMenu" window.

On the "SelectionMenu" window, the user has the choice of selecting 3 different food options: Hoagies, Soups/Sides, and Beverages. Clicking on one of these images will lead to a separate menu that allows the user to select what kind of that certain food option they want. Clicking on everything else (with the exception of the "Previous button" image) will lead to different messages popping up with goofy text in them.

If the user clicked on the "Hoagie & Sandwiches" image from the "SelectionMenu" window, they will be transported to the "HoagieWindow" window that allows them to choose between three different hoagies. If the user didn't intend to come to this screen, they can always select the "Previous button" image to go back. Otherwise, selecting one of the three hoagies will cause the running list to update itself and move the user to the "PrintOutWindow" window.

If the user clicked on the "Soups & Sides" image from the "SelectionMenu" window, they will be transported to the "SoupsAndSidesWindow" window that allows them to choose between two different soups and sides. If the user didn't intend to come to this screen, they can always select the "Previous button" image to go back. Otherwise, selecting one of these soups/sides will cause the running list to update itself and move the user to the "PrintOutWindow" window.

If the user clicked on the "Beverages" image from the "SelectionMenu" window, they will be transported to the "HotAndColdBeverageWindow" window that allows them to choose between two different kinds of beverages. Unlike the previous food options, clicking on one of the two images will NOT lead them to the "PrintOutWindow" window and, instead, open up a window that has all of the available choices regarding that certain kind of beverage.

If the user clicked on the "Cold Beverages" image from the "HotAndColdBeverageWindow" window, they will be transported to the "ColdBeveragesWindow" window that allows them to choose between three different cold beverages. If the user didn't intend to come to this screen, they can always select the "Previous button" image to go back. Otherwise, selecting one of these soups/sides will cause the running list to update itself and move the user to the "PrintOutWindow" window.

On the "PrintOutWindow" window, the user has the choice of printing out the current running list that will return the total price and order number via MessageBox. The user can also select 3 different food options that they go through to potentially add another item to the list: Hoagies, Soups/Sides, and Beverages. Clicking on one of these images will lead to a separate menu that allows the user to select what kind of that certain food option they want. Clicking on everything else (with the exception of the "Previous button" and "Cancel button" images) will lead to different messages popping up with goofy text in them.

This is only just a pop-up that executes from the "PrintOutWindow" window whenever the "cancel button" image was clicked. If the "OK" button was pressed, restart the order and close out the window. If the "Cancel" button was pressed , just only close out the pop-up and continue the order. This window is excluded from the topology as it is not like the other windows since it functions mirror that of a traditional pop-up window.
